Chris combines big-picture strategic thinking with careful attention to the details that drive high-stakes litigation in technical areas of the law.

Chris acts in a wide range of complex business and regulatory disputes, including defence of class actions, competition law proceedings, judicial review of delegated legislation and administrative decisions, contentious intellectual property matters, and other commercial litigation. He has particular experience working with clients who put technology at the core of their business, from pharmaceuticals to broadcasting and online services. He is recognized for developing creative and pragmatic litigation strategies guided by a deep understanding of clients' business objectives.

Prior to joining Davies, Chris was a litigator in the Toronto office of a prominent Canadian law firm.
