DAVIES

Samuel Moore
Student

Office
Toronto

Tel
416.863.0900

Samuel's studies in English literature taught him to read closely, analyze arguments and interpret complex texts – skills indispensable for a career in law.

Samuel is particularly interested in litigation, and is drawn to the adversarial process and how legal reasoning interacts with political, ethical and commercial issues.

Education

University of Oxford

Law School

University of Western Ontario

More About Me

Why did you choose to work with Davies?

Davies stood out as a place where people take their work seriously but are still approachable and collegial. Everyone I met was easy to talk to and passionate about their practice area, and the environment felt both challenging and collaborative. I also liked that Davies was smaller by the standards of Bay Street, with a tighter-knit community, especially within litigation.

If you were not a lawyer, what career would you have chosen?

I would have chosen journalism. I enjoy writing, research and exploring ideas in depth. It also shares a focus on investigation, storytelling and argumentation that parallels legal work.

Is there a skill you would like to learn?

I'd love to become a better cook. Food has so much personality, and it seems like a great way to be creative. Also, since I enjoy eating good food, it might be wise to learn how to make some myself.